BIOGRAPHICAL PARAGRAPH

Harvey K. Newman

Harvey K. Newman was born in Fort Worth, Texas, and grew up in Wake Forest, North Carolina. He attended Davidson College as an undergraduate, and has a masters degree from Duke University. He earned his doctorate from Emory University and is currently an Associate Professor, Department of Public Administration and Urban Studies, Andrew Young School of Policy Studies, Georgia State University. His teaching includes courses on urban policy issues, economic development planning, and public-private partnership development. He served for two years as Chair of the governing board of the Urban Affairs Association, the national professional association for urban affairs educators. Since 1994, Professor Newman has been a member of the Urban Design Commission of the City of Atlanta, serving as Chair in 1995. His publications include a book, Southern Hospitality: Tourism and the Growth of Atlanta, released in 1999 by the University of Alabama Press. The book addresses the history of Atlanta's growth as a center for tourism and hospitality businesses. In addition, he has published articles on other policy issues such as hospitality and violence, the impact of the Olympics on Atlanta's neighborhoods, and historic preservation policy in Atlanta. He is currently examining changes in public housing policy by the Atlanta Housing Authority for Research Atlanta.
